

This subject strengthens the student's ability to provide preventive, promotive, and curative services in the community. It focuses on leadership, management, and supervision in public health settings.

Syllabus:

- Health system management at the primary level
- Planning and organizing health services at community level
- Supervision and evaluation of health workers
- Community health nursing process
- School health, adolescent health, and geriatric care
- Health education methods and planning
-

Role of nurse in national health programs

- Records and reports in community health
- Home-based maternal and newborn care
- Urban health and slum population care strategies